Performance since inception

Past performance is not a reliable indicator of future performance.

(1) Portfolio returns are calculated net of management, performance, administration/custody and transaction fees, but excluding any adviser fees from the Managed Portfolio's inception date of 31/12/2023 and assumes reinvestment of all income (but not franking credits). Returns are based on the theoretical performance of a portfolio from the inception date based on simplifying assumptions and security weightings. Actual individual returns of each client's portfolio will differ depending on factors such as date of initial investment, timing of transactions, contributions and withdrawals, fees and any customisations. Each client should also take into account their own taxation situations. All information provided in this report is correct as at the date of this report but without independent verification.

Monthly portfolio commentary

August was a whipsaw of a month, with a sharp correction in early August, followed by a very strong recovery that saw equity markets roughly back to even for the month. The strongest performers were Property and Infrastructure, helped by both the fall in bond yields, and the rallying AUD (given these exposures are currency hedged). International Equities, which have outperformed for much of 2024, were the underperformer, once again in part because of their unhedged exposure in weaker market for the USD.

The Balanced Income portfolio delivered a positive return of 0.46% for the month but underperformed the benchmark, which returned 0.67%. The main sources of underperformance were our Alternatives allocations. Defensive alternatives didn't keep up with the strong bond returns, while our Growth Alternatives struggled in a whipsaw environment such as we saw in August. Some outperformance came from our income focused Talaria Global Equity Fund, which outperformed global equities by 2%.

Market commentary and outlook

The sharp correction in stocks in July/early August was due to several factors, with the most important one being softer-than-expected economic growth data that culminated in a weak employment report on August 2. In particular, the 0.2pp increase in the unemployment rate is what triggered the Sahm Rule and caused markets to worry again about a hard landing. Since then, we have received some better economic data led by jobless claims, retail sales and the ISM non-manufacturing survey (though some data has been softer, too). As a result, many equity market indices have rallied back to near all-time highs, while the bond market, yen and commodities reflect lingering suspicions that the coast might not be clear. Even equity market "internals" like cyclical versus defensive stocks have failed to rebound much at all, while lower-beta stocks continued to show very resilient performance amid the mixed data on both the macroeconomic and microeconomic fronts.

Over the past month, it has become clear that inflation is no longer the only risk on the Fed's radar. Confidence in the disinflation progress has increased, with personal consumption expenditures (PCE) inflation now under 3%. However, concerns about downside labour market risks have grown following the softer-than-expected July and August jobs data. The Fed believes they are still on track to a "soft landing" and has since delivered a 50bp cut with a renewed focus on jobs rather than inflation for the first time since COVID.

The challenge for equity investors is that markets are trading in the top quartile of historical valuation ranges. With downside risk if growth falters very real, there appears to be a lot riding on the upcoming labour reports for equity investors.

Until we get more evidence that growth is holding up or improving, it makes sense to favour quality, large cap stocks rather than drifting too far into the early cycle trades like Small Caps. In a late-cycle, soft-landing outcome in which the Fed is cutting rates due to growth concerns and labour market weakness, these areas of the market typically do not do well. We do not see why it will be different this time for small caps and cheap cyclicals unless the labour data holds up and the Fed stays on track to reduce rates in an orderly way.
